

Princess Rahman Bio

Princess Rahman is a history major in the College with a premedical emphasis for post-graduate studies. As a PRRUCS scholar she is assisting in research elucidating the influence of segregation in America on religious groups and missionary focus in 1960s America. Additionally, she serves on the Local Grow Committee of GlobeMed, a pre-health club that partners with Prevention Point, a local clinic that addresses the opioid epidemic in Philadelphia directly. Currently, as a sustainability fellow at Bartram's Garden, she advocates for food justice and provides educational opportunities through community initiatives to promote food sovereignty. She also sits on the board for Collective Success at Penn as a mental health chair helping first-generation low-income students navigate institutions of higher learning. In her free time she enjoys picking up a game of volleyball and adding some of Philly's unique structures to her architectural photography collection.
